POWERFUL PUPPET

Once a week, Johnny Fischer would take his puppets out of room 1935 on the tenth floor of the Amalgamated Broadcasting Company. For, at six o'clock on Wednesday evenings his little creatures of wood went on their television show. Johnny wrote the script himself and always gave his favorite puppet, Peter, the leading role. Just now, Burt Henderson, the press agent, was talking to his friend Johnny and he had something important to say.

"The children like your puppet show very much. In fact I get reports that some of the boys and girls have even met Peter The Powerful Puppet in adventures. Shows you what imagination can do. The kids probably have a dream about that Puppet and think they really see him. Put the show away and we'll go up to the country for the week-end."

It was now eleven o'clock at night, and Peter the Powerful Puppet turned his head around and looked at his wooden friends. He had just received a vibration message that there would be trouble somewhere and he must hurry and help children.

"If I need your help," he told the other puppets, "I will send you a secret code message. In the meanwhile see that everything is peaceful while I am away."

As soon as he finished, he walked over to the window. He opened it, and a minute later he was flashing through the sky. He wore his favorite golden jacket, and whenever a beam of light hit him, he would glow.

"Look, mommie," said a tired little boy holding his mother's hand, "I can see Peter The Powerful Puppet flashing through the sky. He must be on his way to help some boy or girl in trouble."

"You are overtired," replied the mother.

"You should have been in bed hours ago. But you wanted to visit your Uncle Jim. And why? Just because he lets you see your favorite puppet on his television set. We will be home soon."

Mr. and Mrs. Charles McAuley were a bit worried. Outwardly their faces were beaming with joy; for, they were at a party given by Mr. McAuley's boss.

"We shouldn't have left the twins at home alone," protested Mrs. McAuley to her husband. "I am upset because our sitter failed to show up."

"Michael and Gregory aren't babies any longer," replied her husband. "They are now ten years old. They were tight asleep when we left. And our neighbors said they would be alert in case anything went wrong. So forget it, and let us have a good time. Once a year my boss gives this party and he wants all his staff to be present."

Gregory McAuley knew his parents had left the house. He heard the door slam and then spoke to his twin.

"Now we can play on the raft and make believe we are pirates. Hurry and put on your boots and warm clothing. We will take our toy pistols with us. It is very dark and we won't be seen by the neighbors. Mother and dad asked them to keep an eye on us."

The twins dressed quickly and left by the back door. So that they could return without a key, they fixed the lock on the door so it did not snap tightly. Then they walked down the stone path that led to the pier. They saw their father's motor boat tied up safely. From the pier they walked about two hundred yards south along the river bank. Then they saw their raft.

ATOMIC MOUSE COMICS

"Now we are pirates," shouted Michael with glee in his voice. "We will sail the Spanish Main and look for big ships full of gold."

They boarded their raft and cast loose the rope that held it tied to the shore. The night was dark and the raft went with the tide.

"Do you see an enemy warship?" asked Gregory.

Michael peered into the darkness. He saw a large object ahead of him.

"It is only Mr. Wilson's boat. But we can make believe it is an enemy warship. We will ask them to surrender. Otherwise we'll board them and kill all of them."

The tide was getting stronger and the raft went right past Mr. Wilson's boat. Now it was midstream and it was going faster and faster.

Sometimes the water would sweep over it. They were heading out to the sea.

"We aren't afraid of anything in the world," said Michael with his toy pistol in his hand. "We will hoist the pirate flag and scare people."

"I left the pirate flag at home," admitted Gregory. "We were in such a hurry to get here. We are headed towards the open sea. We must use the oars to keep near the shore."

But alas, there weren't any oars. Seems they had been left on the bank of the river. And the raft was getting closer and closer to the open sea. Meanwhile high in the sky was Peter The Powerful Puppet. His vibration message was getting stronger and stronger. He looked downward and spotted the raft with the two boys. It was now on the open sea. Down he went, and just one second later he was on the raft.

"Peter the Powerful Puppet just boarded our raft," shouted Michael to his twin. "Is he friend or foe?"

"What a silly question to ask," snapped back Gregory. "Every boy and girl in this land knows that he is our friend."

"You two should be safely home in bed. And tight asleep. The only adventures boys and girls of your age can have at this time are in dreamland. The way the tide is running you will be carried right out to sea. And the barometer is dropping. I can feel it in my wooden bones. The raft will turn over, and then you know what will happen."

Michael and Gregory were scared. The water was beginning to break all over the raft. And it was getting colder and colder and darker and darker.

"We should have remained home in bed," admitted Gregory. "But you know how it is. When everything is happy and peaceful you want adventure and trouble. And when you have adventure and trouble you want everything to be happy and peaceful. Funny world."

"Funny people," corrected Peter The Powerful Puppet. "But the most important thing is to get you home safely. Hold on tightly. I will bend down on the raft and blow. I blow one way and the raft goes the other way."

And he blew and blew, and in exactly three minutes the raft was back from where it had started. Then Peter The Powerful Puppet took the twins into their house. He dried them and put them to bed. And being a very clever Puppet, he cleaned up the house so thoroughly that you could never tell two wet and tired children had been out of it. And he left the house just at the very minute that Mr. and Mrs. McAuley drove up in their car. For a fraction of a second, Mr. McAuley looked skyward.

"I would have sworn I just saw Peter The Powerful Puppet in the sky," he admitted. "But at this late hour I guess you can see anything. I'll put the car in the garage and we will go in the back way."

The door was open, and this puzzled the husband and wife. They entered slowly and saw no burglars. So Mrs. McAuley came to what looked like a sound conclusion.

"How careless you are getting. You forgot to lock the back door. Let us tiptoe upstairs and look at the twins."

Soon the parents were at the bedside of Michael and Gregory. Of course the twins weren't as yet asleep, but they closed their eyes and made a good imitation out of it.

"They look like two angels," admitted the proud mother. "But I was a bit worried this afternoon when they talked about being pirates. We must get rid of the raft they built. It could be very dangerous."

Johnny Fischer was getting his puppets ready for their Wednesday evening broadcast. Suddenly he looked at the shoes worn by Peter The Powerful Puppet.

"Am I getting careless?" said Johnny Fischer to himself. "I am certain I cleaned up all the puppets before I went away. And now there is something that looks like mud on the shoes of Peter The Powerful Puppet. I wonder how it got there? I wonder how it got there?"

Letters from ATOMIC MOUSE'S MAIL BAG

HI! FOLKS...
HERE ARE THE LUCKY
WINNERS!

Dear Readers: We were swamped by so many wonderful letters in answer to our CONTEST in Atomic Mouse #3. It was difficult to choose from so many but we finally selected as the most original letter the one from Barbara Brooks, 4339 Rawlins Street, Dallas 19, Texas; Barbara Brooks wins the original drawing of ATOMIC MOUSE by Al Fago.

Dear Al Fago,

I think ATOMIC MOUSE is swell because it furnishes good clean wholesome fun in reading. Since at school we are encouraged to read and since ATOMIC MOUSE isn't very hard to understand and read, it helps us in our school work too.

I was first introduced to ATOMIC MOUSE on the train where I really enjoyed it, and everyone was borrowing it.

The things I like best in it are the drawings by Al Fago and the people: pigs, dogs, bears, cats and mice. The picture of Count Gatto looks just like someone who blows a whistle and is in an awful hurry.

Reminds me of mother calling us for that last minute shopping.

You know there's just one thing wrong you can't buy ATOMIC MOUSE at many news-stands. Please get it circulated more. Keep up the good work. Thank you.

Your comic fan,

Barbara Brooks.

P. S. There are 98 Atomic Mouses in this issue.

As you can see Barbara guessed that the word Atomic Mouse appeared 98 times and that is the correct answer.

One dollar will be sent to each of the following boys and girls who also guessed that the words Atomic Mouse appeared 98 times in Atomic Mouse #3:

We thank all of you for your wonderful response to our contest. All letters will be answered in time—may take a while because all of you know how busy Atomic Mouse is, keeping law and order in Mouseville.

All you loyal fans can now become members of the ATOMIC MOUSE FAN CLUB. Your many requests have prompted us to make this come true for you. Our next issue will announce how YOU can obtain your ATOMIC MOUSE FAN CLUB membership card with your own name imprinted on it. Be sure to get your copy of Atomic Mouse #5 and become a charter member of the ATOMIC MOUSE FAN CLUB.
